

An Introduction to Computational Linguistics

Prerequisite: Computer Programming, Mathematics and Statistics, General Phonetics

Credit Hours: (3)

The course provides students with an introduction to the whole scope of computational linguistics including an introduction to language and speech technologies, such as language understanding, and methods of training and evaluating them. The course outline covers the introduction and history of natural language processing and relevant technologies and products and language modeling.